Studying Crisis Migration: An International Perspective

Crisis migration – the mass relocation of individuals and families following major natural or human disasters – has increased exponentially during the 21st century. Thousands or millions of Iraqis, Syrians, Venezuelans, Puerto Ricans, Ukrainians, and Afghans have been displaced over the last 20 years. Crisis migrants arrive in their new homelands with very different family, mental health, housing, employment, and other needs than other types of migrants do. I will present a summary of our work with Puerto Rican, Venezuelan, and Ukrainian crisis migrants in the United States and elsewhere since 2017.

Seth J. Schwartz was born in New York City, grew up on Long Island, and moved to Florida at the age of 10. He received his bachelor's degree in psychology at Florida State University in 1993, his master's degree in family and child sciences at Florida State University in 1996, and his Ph.D. in developmental psychology at Florida International University in 2000. He was a post-doctoral fellow, and later a professor, at the University of Miami from 2000 to 2020. Dr. Schwartz joined the UT-Austin College of Education in January 2021.
